Perspiration, with expectoration of pus and mucus, comes on in greater or less quantity in the advanced period of the night, and is attended by a certain obscure redoubling, as it were, of some of its dilations, which is then felt, and this, united with other attributes of the pulse, gives a certain and sure sign of the successive suppuration of the tubercles. Relying greatly, therefore, on the character of the pulse as a means of prognosis, it is incumbent on the medical practitioner not to advise convalescents change of air to any place or locality where, from natural circumstances...
